What training is needed to work in this field?	For this position one ought possess a college degree, preferably in journalism or writing. One can find an entry-level job in this field, so long as one doesn't mind starting from the bottom, perhaps copyediting or fact checking.
What is a typical week like or what do you spend most of your time doing in your job?	I spend a good majority of my time processing subscriptions, dealing with subscribers, and performing other administrative duties. As an editor, I participate in a lot of meetings, edit the magazine, and come up with new ideas. I also table booths at conferences.
What is the job outlook for this field?	It doesn't have a high demand, and a lot of people want to work in this field. Therefore you must be willing to work for a relatively modest wage, and work long hours. You should also show a large amount of drive and enthusiasm for the work.
What are the benefits of working in this field?	Countless. I am able to work on a creative project, with tangible results. I am able to reach a large amount of people through my work. And most importantly, I am able to work for an ethical company dedicated to the cause of vegetarianism. I like to think that I am doing some good in the world, and this represents the top benefit of my position. Also I get to enjoy a lot of free samples, and to travel for the job.
What advice or other information do you want to share with someone considering this field?	Don't go into journalism unless you maintain a lot of passion for the field; otherwise you will burn out. Be persistent. When applying for positions, make sure that your resume and application represent your absolute best work. Make it a part of your daily routine to search for that perfect position. Remember the primary duty of journalism: to inform the public. In this light, don't work for a publication without ethics and integrity. Don't sell out.
